Student Spotlight: Bibi Reed

Bibi Reed, Strategic Communication & Leadership

I really like the faculty here at UWF. Right from the beginning, they just made me feel very comfortable and right at home. I was able to speak to the program director before I even applied to the program. I sent her an email; she replied right away; responded to all my questions; just made it such an easy transition especially because I graduated ten years ago. And so, coming back to school was a little intimidating because things have changed a lot, but the faculty is amazing. The program director is involved with every aspect from applying to choosing your classes.

They are very excited to have people come into the program with work experience, and so, don't even think for a second that you are going to be behind or you are just not going to be up to date. They love that experience, that real-world experience that you have to offer, and it's funny because you can actually apply it to everything that is being... being taught today. And a lot of the younger students in the classes with you really appreciate your experience, and they definitely take advantage of that and ask a lot of questions. And so, I've really liked bringing my past experience.
