

University of West Florida | Graduate School

Student Spotlight: Rachel Huang

Updated July 30, 2019

Rachel Huang, Accounting

I am in the Master's of Accountancy program at UWF. I'm so glad to be in the UWF community. Moving to Pensacola probably was the best decision I've ever made, and I'm very grateful for what UWF has provided for me.

I have received the graduate assistantship from the College of Business, which helped me a great deal to be here. Especially when I'm an international student, and it also give me more chance to get involved on campus.

I'm at my last stage of program and at this time, I am clear of what my goals are and my motivations is and UWF give me opportunities on both education and career development.

My program provides online courses, and I found it is great because you are able to study and work with your own schedule. As for accounting, most of students' ultimate goals is to be CPA licensed and UWF provide this great program to help you to work towards that goal.

I found that UWF has a very caring and evolved environment. It is not a large school, and because of that, the class size is small and you really get to know your professors, your classmates, and the professor know who you are also. And they will give you valuable advice, and they want you to be successful.

And all the faculties and staff are very helpful and nice from the beginning. I got to work with different departments, help the faculties with their research project, and develop the relationships with the professors and some lifelong friendships.